Worten is presenting two new Street Photography workshops in partnership with Olympus - the first next Saturday 13 October at the Colombo Worten store between 10:00 and 13:00 and the second the following Saturday the 20th, at the Mar Shopping store, also between 10:00 and 13:00.

These workshops, called "Between Streets" are free admission. Anyone who is interested can bring a photograph they like for the trainer to analyse and this way encourage a conversation among the audience about how different people approach the topic of Street Photography.

If you cannot attend in person, Worten is going to live stream the first event on its Facebook and Instagram pages.

Rui Miguel Cunha is a photographer, director and editor of "Magazine Reportagem" and has featured in countless other editions and magazines. He also exhibits under his own name at domestic and international shows. He mainly takes his inspiration from day-to-day life and sketches a documentary narrative in his works using the concept of photojournalism with a strong connection to Street Photography, which he describes as showing the naked truth.

Worten hopes that these workshops provide a great experience for its customers who will be able to learn or improve techniques about Street Photography. By investing in this kind of event, Worten is also reinforcing its position as a specialist brand in the photography area by offering personalised training and a wide range of products at the best price.
